SUMMARY

Dr Lukasz Krzyzowski is a Vice Chancellor's Research Fellow at Edith Cowan University, focusing on the intersections of migration, sexual orientation, and gender diversity. His research addresses complex social issues affecting marginalised communities, including LGBTIQ+ individuals, older people, and culturally and linguistically diverse (CaLD) populations. He has led the Rainbow Migrants project, which investigates support mechanisms for CaLD LGBTIQ+ people, including refugees and international students. His initiatives, such as 'Karaoke with an Accent', enhance the visibility and inclusion of rainbow migrants through cultural expression and innovative digital solutions. His expertise spans social network analysis, mixed methods research, action research, and co-design approaches, which he utilises to develop culturally safe services and shape policy recommendations. Dr Krzyzowski's work addresses aged care, migration, diversity, digital citizenship, and intimate partner violence, advocating for an intersectional approach to service co-design. His academic, advocacy, community, and industry engagement experience contribute to advancing social justice and equal access to support services, with both theoretical and practical applications in the field of sociology.
